January 16, 2014; Thursday—Winter Film Festival “Who Owns the Past?”

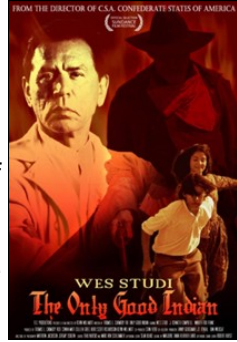

Native American artifacts have been extensively and aggressively collected – to the point that some tribes have much of their cultural legacy in museum collections out of their control. This film lays out the controversies surrounding efforts to repatriate Native artifacts. Come to the Interpretive Center's Theater at 4:00 or 7:00 p.m. for this evening's presentation. FREE!

January 23, 2014; Thursday—Winter Film Festival “The Only Good Indian...”

North American governments adopted a policy of forcing acculturation to the dominant White culture on Native American children throughout much of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This dramatic film personalizes the experience of a young Canadian Indian boy through his life and experiences in a government boarding school. Come to the Interpretive Center's Theater at 4:00 or 7:00 p.m. for this evening's presentation. FREE! Content advisory for parents: This film contains violent scenes and profanity.

January 30, 2014; Thursday—Winter Film Festival “Montana Mosaic – The History of Montana’s Native Americans.”

This production from Montana PBS and the Montana Historical Society details some of the challenges facing Montana's Native peoples from European contact until today. Come to the Interpretive Center's Theater at 4:00 or 7:00 p.m. for this evening's presentation. FREE!

February 6, 2014; Thursday—Winter Film Festival “Before There Were Parks”
